HISTORY of the Cossack Union – Who We Are

In 1925, the Union of Russian Cossacks at Shanghai was established in Shanghai, China by the first generation of the Cossacks who settled in Shanghai as they retreated from the Bolsheviks. At that time 700 Cossacks joined the Union and there were 10 different stanitsas (groups or hosts) with an Ataman at the head of each. At the meeting on November 29, 1925, a head Ataman (President of the Union) was elected.

COSSACK UNION
MEMBERS' MEETING,
SHANGHAI, 1931

In 1926, some gained entry to the United States, settling in San Francisco. At the end of World War II, more of these Cossacks who did not have family members, born in China, were allowed to immigrate to the United States arriving there as early as 1946. Cossacks with family members born in China were not allowed to enter the United States. The United States decided that there were too many Chinese in the United States already and no one born in China was allowed entry.

When the Chinese Communists approached Shanghai in 1948, the Cossacks and other Russians still remaining in Shanghai had to get out of China. They looked for refuge everywhere but the only country that would allow them entry was the Philippines. In January and February of 1949 between 5,000 and 6,000 "refugees" were transported by ship to a seven square mile island called Tubabao located off the south-eastern tip of Samar Island. There they cleared the jungle and built a tent camp. From Tubabao about 1,000 refugees, including the Shanghai Cossacks, dispersed to any country that would accept them; Australia, Argentina, Chile, Dominican Republic, and France. The rest had no place to go.

In the United States, there were Russians, including Cossacks, living in San Francisco since Fort Ross was established in 1812. The Russians were a part of the American community and the Cossacks were not a coherent group. This changed in 1923 when Cossacks who were part of Admiral Stark's flotilla arrived in San Francisco from Manila, seeking asylum from the Bolshevik revolution. They were allowed to stay, their numbers later augmented by the arrival of the 1926 Shanghai Cossacks. In 1926, this enlarged old and new Cossack community incorporated The All-Russian Cossacks Unit. With the return of peace and calm, its membership became relatively inactive. World War II changed things.

As more Shanghai Cossacks came to United States after 1946, many joined The All-Russian Cossacks' Unit and reinvigorated it. The specific purpose became raising funds and generating public support to get Cossacks from the Philippines and from the rest of the world to San Francisco. To facilitate this purpose, in December 1949, the "All Cossacks' Union of San Francisco" was incorporated as a California nonprofit corporation. The activities of The All-Russian Cossacks Unit ceased and its membership merged into the new corporation.

The 5,000 "Shanghai refugees" remained on Tubabao, Philippines, until through the intercession of St. John of San Francisco, California, United States Senator William Knowland came to Tubabao in 1950 and realized that the Russian refugees were not Chinese. He authored a bill that allowed the Russian refugees to enter the United States. The refugees were allowed entry to the United States if they had a sponsor who would support them until they became self-sufficient. The Cossacks in San Francisco turned their efforts to get sponsors for the Tubabao Cossacks.

TUBABAO GROUPS' MEETING

900 ASHBURY ST.

By the time Cossacks from Tubabao started arriving in San Francisco (first ship arrived on November 30, 1950) the All Cossacks' Union of San Francisco had already raised enough funds to collect the down payment for the Cossacks' House, a large Edwardian mansion at 900 Ashbury Street. From this headquarters, the All Cossacks' Union of San Francisco sponsored hundreds of Cossacks to America. That work complete, the All Cossacks' Union of San Francisco is now part of the family of support organizations existing throughout the world.

MUSEUM OF THE ALL COSSACKS' UNION OF SAN FRANCISCO

The All Cossacks' Union of San Francisco's Museum is home to a collection of Cossack treasure trove of portraits and paintings, by Nikita Knatz Popov, a long-time member of the Cossacks' Union of SF. Nikita Knatz was creator of the logo of the All Cossacks' Union of San Francisco.

The Cossacks' museum is located on the 3rd floor of the Scouts' Building at 6231 Geary Boulevard in San Francisco and is open by appointment. Information about the museum and to schedule a visit, please email: allcossacksunionsf@gmail.com

This large portrait of Tsar Nicholas II was gifted to the Cossacks' Union in Shanghai by then-Consul General of Imperial Russia, Victor Fyodorovich Grosse. The portrait hung in the Russo-Asiatic Bank in Shanghai, until it was closed. The Cossacks' Union brought the portrait with them to San Francisco, where it hung at the Cossacks' Building at 900 Ashbury until the building was sold. As there was no room in the new Cossack home that was re-located to 6700 Fulton Street, nor the Cossacks' Museum's current location, the portrait is now housed at the main hall of the Holy Virgin Cathedral at 6210 Geary Boulevard, across the street from the All Cossack's Union of San Francisco's current location.

COSSACK MONUMENT AT SERBIAN CEMETERY

The Cossack Monument at the Serbian Cemetery in Colma, California was erected in 2003 by the hard working Cossacks under the leadership of then-president of the All Cossacks' Union of San Francisco, Ataman Victor Pavlovich Metlenko and generous donors as a Memorial to all those Cossacks, who were forced to leave their homeland and suffered under the Bolshevik Revolution, Civil War and subsequent persecution. For years, Cossacks have preserved their cultural and historical heritage as well as given support, financially, emotionally & spiritually to those in need.

Annually on Radonitsa (the first Sunday after Easter), a memorial service (panihida) is held at the monument by one of the local Russian Orthodox priests presiding, with prayers for the departed, followed by a remembrance food table (pominki) prepared by the Cossacks' Union directors, members and friends.

The special moral code of the Cossacks – brotherhood of people united by a special state of spirit and consciousness, morality and ethics – continues to this day!

ALL COSSACKS' UNION OF SHANGHAI EMBLEM

The emblem of the Cossacks' Union in Shanghai was made of silver-plated bronze metal, size 21 x 28mm.

The emblem with a scarlet background was for the Siberian and Semirechensk Cossack troops.

The emblem with a yellow background was for the Yenisei, Irkutsk, Amur, Transbaikal and Ussuryi Cossack troops.

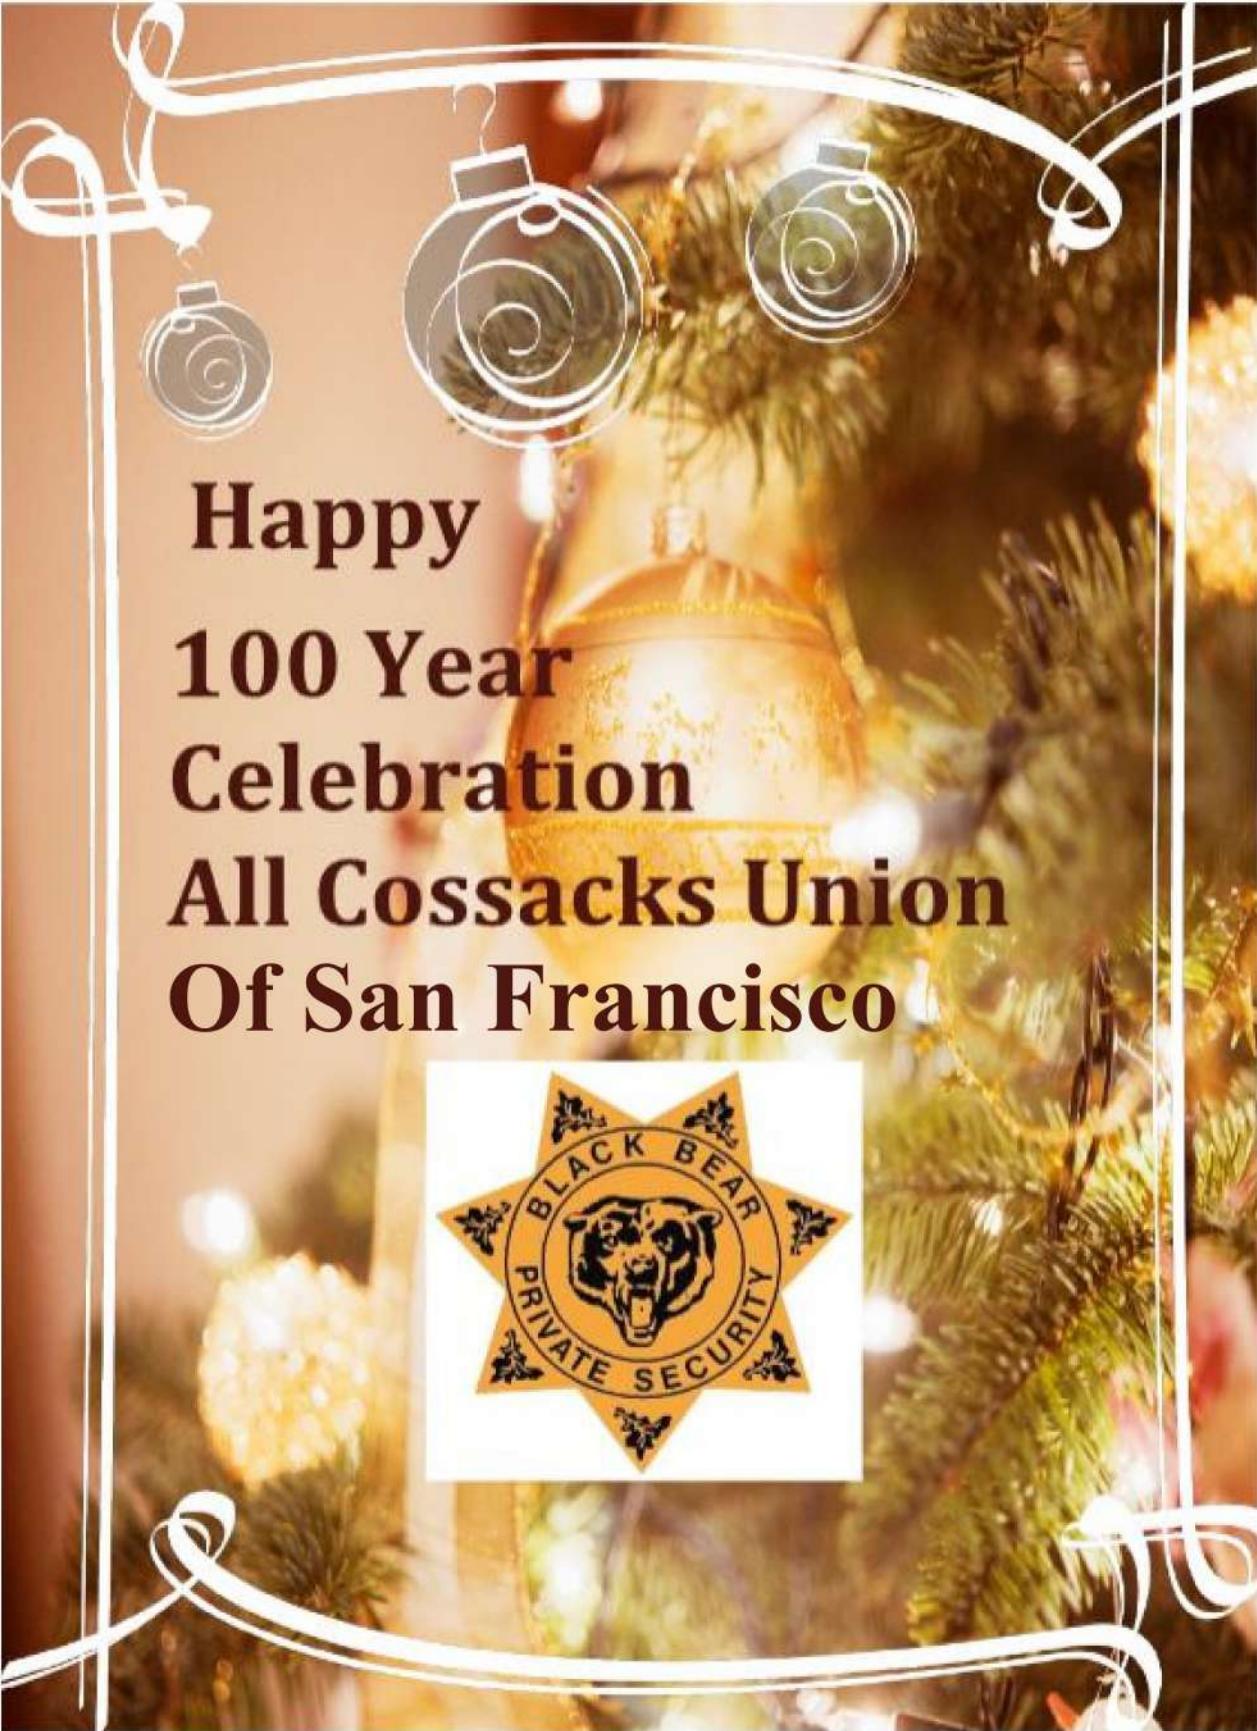

The emblem with a blue background was for the Orenburg Cossack troops.

The Cossack Union in Shanghai was officially established on April 12, 1925, during a meeting of the founders, and was later approved by the general meeting of the Union members on November 29 of the same year. The organization was initiated by I.N. Shendrikov, a Cossack of the Semirechensky Cossack army, and A.E. Gryzov, the military foreman of the Siberian Cossack army. The Union aimed to unite Cossacks from various Cossack troops in Shanghai for mutual support, to preserve Cossack unity and traditions, and to prepare for the future construction of Russia. By 1929, the Cossack Union in Shanghai had already united 10 Cossack villages and had approximately 700 members. The emblem of the Cossacks' Union in Shanghai served as a tangible reminder of the unity and camaraderie among the Cossack community in Shanghai during a pivotal period in Russian history.

ALL COSSACKS' UNION OF SAN FRANCISCO, INC LOGO

The All Cossacks' Union of San Francisco incorporated the logo from the artwork of Nikita Knatz Popov (1940-2010), who was a prolific artist, actor, assistant director, producer, production designer, art and animation illustrator and long-time member of the Cossacks' Union.
